This book, the third edition, is noteworthy for several reasons. First, its price is lower than last year's because this year the rankings will not appear in the National Masters News, and the savings for that expense has enabled us to cut the price. Second, all of the field event marks are in meters. Converting feet and inches to metric increases compilation time by at least 50% for field-event rankers, so to those compilers we owe a double thanks.

The compilers this year were Larry Patz and Al Neville of New Hampshire; Charles Mercurio of California; William Benson and Tom Rauscher of New York; Jerry Feldhausen of Wisconsin; Robb Bong and Tom Flack of Colorado; John Dickey of Missouri; and Glen Peterson of South Dakota.

Thanks are also due to The AthleticsCongress Masters Track & Field Committee and Barbara Kousky, Masters Chairwoman, for allocating funds for rankings, and to Al Sheahen and Jack Hudock of the National Masters News, and Pete Mundle, Masters Records Chairman, for their input.

When one compares the participants in the events in all three books, some trends are apparent. Certain events, such as the 10,000m and steeplechase, are, at best, stagnant, while others, such as racewalking and the field events in the older age groups, are growing. The latter increase is probably a result of the increase of senior games meets for ages 55-and-over throughout the country.

Some marks are followed by the letter "q" to show that the mark is questionable, usually because of scanty documentation, or suspect because of possible reporting or transcription error.

Because most of the marks for these rankings are taken from results published in the National Masters News, readers and athletes should assume some responsibility for accuracy by forwarding corrections soon after the results are published.

A good example of a watchful eye is Ed Martin, an M55 pentathlete from California, who discovered that the 200 in the National Pentathlon Championships in Indianapolis was scored by the women's tables. He even redid the calculations, which is why the totals in the pentathlon rankings may differ from the published results.

The corrections for errors and omissions will appear in next year's issue.

TAC Masters Rankings Coordinator
